On Thursday, the Trump administration held a press briefing to introduce their tax-cutting budget plan, titled "MAGAnomics," and the internet had a field day turning it into a meme. REPUBLICAN STRATEGY ON HEALTHCARE BILL IN FLUX

Republican Senate leaders aim to hold a procedural vote as early as Tuesday to take up legislation to repeal or replace Obamacare, but it remained unclear which version of the bill senators would vote on. President Donald Trump and congressional Republicans campaigned on a pledge to roll back former President Barack Obama's signature healthcare law, the 2010 Affordable Care Act, also known as Obamacare. Senator John Thune, a member of the Republican leadership, told "Fox News Sunday" the initial vote was simply a way to open debate on the bill so that senators from both parties could offer amendments.

DEATH TOLL IN HUMAN SMUGGLING CASE RISES

At least nine men were found dead alongside dozens of people discovered inside a sweltering tractor trailer parked at a Walmart store in San Antonio, Texas, in what authorities called a case of "ruthless" human trafficking. Thirty people, many in critical condition and suffering from heat stroke and exhaustion, were removed from the trailer, which lacked air conditioning or a water supply, San Antonio Fire Chief Charles Hood said. Temperatures outside the vehicle topped 100 degrees Fahrenheit. Another person was found in a wooded area nearby and was also being treated, the U.S. Attorney's Office for the Western District of Texas said. All the deceased were adult males, it said. Authorities initially said eight bodies were found in the trailer, but the U.S. Attorney's Office statement later said the death toll had risen to nine.

BOSTON NAKED BIKE RIDERS BARE ALL

The eighth annual Naked Bike Ride in Boston took place in Jamaica Plain on Saturday, celebrating nudity, body positivity and the power of bicycling. Biker Stephanie Parilla, 23, of New York, said she was excited about "the fact that we're naked in public. That's always been on my bucket list." And what does she like about biking naked? "The fact that we're naked." The participants gathered at Spontaneous Celebrations on Danforth Street in Jamaica Plain before riding nude through the streets. Various ages, body types and degrees of nudity were welcomed as riders utilized body paint, costumes or just their birthday suit as the event unfolded. The route was kept secret and only revealed as the ride began. Onlookers in JP observing the start of the parade said they enjoyed the spectacle. "Cycling is a bit like flying — it's freedom. Being naked at the same time as riding must actually feel pretty f—g awesome," observed Darren Green, 47, of JP, who was watching the riders with his fiancée.

CRACKDOWN PROMISED ON MEDIA LEAKS

Anthony Scaramucci, President Donald Trump's new communications director, said on Sunday that one of his first tasks will be to halt leaks and that staff on his team would be fired if the leaks do not stop. "If we don't get the leaks stopped, I am a businessperson, and so I will take dramatic action to stop those leaks," Scaramucci said on "Fox News Sunday." Scaramucci told CBS's "Face the Nation" that leak-ers are "actually un-American," and that he would lead a team meeting on Monday. The hiring of Scaramucci brings a combative style to the White House press office as President Donald Trump lashes out at probes into whether his campaign colluded with Russians during the 2016 campaign.

ARMY SERGEANT CHARGED TRYING TO HELP ISIS

A U.S. Army sergeant stationed in Hawaii has been indicted on charges of trying to provide material support to Islamic State, allowing the case to move to a federal trial without a preliminary hearing, officials said. Ikaika Erik Kang, 34, is being held in jail and is scheduled to appear in court in Honolulu on Monday to face charges. He was arrested on July 8. The indictment, from a U.S. grand jury, accuses the military air traffic controller of four counts of attempting to provide material support or resources to a "foreign terrorist organization." Islamic State, a militant group that has claimed responsibility for suicide bombings and other attacks on civilians around the world, controls territory in Syria and Iraq. Earlier this month, Iraq's prime minister declared victory in a battle to drive Islamic State out of the city of Mosul.

WHAT'S HAPPENING TODAY: KUSHNER TO SPEAK TO SENATE INTELLIGENCE PANEL ON RUSSIA PROBE

President Donald Trump's son-in-law and senior adviser, Jared Kushner, will be interviewed by staff of the Senate Intelligence Committee in a closed session on Monday. According to The Washington Post, Kushner is expected to answer the committee's questions and not invoke his Fifth Amendment right against self-incrimination, according to a person familiar with Kushner's thinking.

Parking meter prices set to increase in Harvard Square

Cambridge announced upcoming parking meter rate increases to help handle high demand.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT
@kristindakota
kristin.toussaint@metro.us

Though no one in the Boston area actually “pahks the cah in Hahvahd yahd,” plenty of people park in Harvard Square, and that high demand is causing the price of parking meters there to rise.

Beginning the week of July 24, parking meter rates across the entire city of Cambridge will increase. The baseline rate is currently $1 an hour and will begin to go up to $1.25 per hour on that date.

Meters in more congested areas will have a higher price. In Harvard Square, rates will rise to $1.50 an hour at the same time.

Rates in “certain outlying areas with lower demand” will remain at $1 an hour, according to the city.

This is the first increase in baseline parking meter rates in Cambridge since 2008. The rates will be phased in over the next month, starting with Harvard Square’s changes.

Joseph Barr, director of Cambridge’s Traffic, Parking and Transportation, said in a statement that the “modest” rate increase will help the city to better manage the high demand for public parking.

“Parking revenues generated from meters also help support various transportation and Vision Zero initiatives in the city,” he added. “Investments in new bicycle infrastructure, traffic calming and safety improvements in key intersection in Cambridge are funded through Parking Fund revenue.”

Rates in Boston recently saw an increase as well when officials enacted a pilot program that fluctuates the price throughout the day according to demand. Meters in the Seaport District vary from $1 to $2.50 an hour, meters in Back Bay are $3.75 an hour and all other meters in the city are $1.25 an hour.

Raising meter prices can reduce congestion and free up more parking spaces, experts say. The Boston area has historically had “cheaper” parking than other cities like Chicago, where meter prices are $2 an hour outside the business area, $4 an hour in the Central Business District and $6.50 an hour in the downtown Loop.

RUSSIA SANCTIONS

White House says open to legislation toughening Russia sanctions

The White House said on Sunday it was open to legislation toughening sanctions on Russia as momentum increased in the U.S. Congress for stronger action against Moscow.

Two U.S. senators said they believe the legislation that allows for new sanctions against Russia would pass with enough votes to override a veto should President Donald Trump decide not to sign the bill.

Republicans and Democrats reached agreement allowing new sanctions targeting Russia, Iran and North Korea in a bill that would limit any potential effort by Trump to try to lift sanctions against Moscow.

“We support where the legislation is now and will continue working with the House and Senate to put those tough sanctions in place on Russia until the situation in Ukraine is fully resolved,” White House press secretary Sarah Sanders told ABC’s “This Week with George Stephanopoulos” program.

Many lawmakers hope the bill will send a message to Trump to keep a strong line against Russia.

“I think [it] will pass probably overwhelmingly again in the Senate and with a veto-proof majority,” Sen. John Thune, a member of the Republican leadership, said on “Fox News Sunday.”

Sen. Ben Cardin, the top Democrat on the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, said the bill has “broad support in the Senate and in the House.”

“If [Trump] vetoes the bill, we will override the veto,” Cardin said.

In recent weeks, Trump administration officials have met with lawmakers to argue against parts of the Senate version of the bill, including the requirement that Trump obtain Congress’ permission before easing sanctions.

Anthony Scaramucci, Trump’s new communications director, said Trump has not yet decided whether he would sign the sanctions bill. REUTERS

Reebok creates new space boot for astronauts

These space boots, made by the Massachusetts-based company, will be worn by astronauts on their way to the International Space Station.

@kristindakota
kristin.toussaint@metro.us

Reebok is expanding its reach to outer space with a new boot being tested by astronauts.

The Massachusetts-based footwear company announced its Floatride Space Boot SB-01 this week, a lightweight space boot developed in partnership with another Bay State manufacturing business, David Clark Company.

The boot has been "exclusively designed" to accompany the final suit to be worn by astronauts while in Boeing's new CST-100 Starliner, the space capsule that will take the astronauts to and from the International Space Station, according to Reebok. The company said that it's the first evolution in space footwear in more than 50 years.

Reebok used its Floatride Foam technology to make sure the boot is as lightweight as possible, which Matt Montross from Reebok Innovation said is crucial to efficient and cost-effective space travel.

The David Clark x Reebok space boots to be worn by astronauts on the CST-100 Starliner shuttle. PROVIDED BY REEBOK

"Weight is a huge factor in space travel with just a single pound having big financial implications," he said in a statement. "Traditional space boots were made of rigid leather with firm soles and were not integrated into the actual space suit."

Reebok's Floatride

Foam introduced "three revolutionary elements" to the footwear, he said: "It decreased the overall weight significantly, it brought the added comfort in a space boot and support that you would expect in a running shoe, and it delivered a new level of sleekness and style."

Boeing and the David Clark Company also worked together on the new Boeing Blue spacesuit that the Reebok footwear will fit onto. The suit brings together firsthand experience from Chris Ferguson, a veteran astronaut, and the David Clark Company's "decades of suit design, development, [testing] and evaluation insight as the makers of more than a dozen air and space suits," according to Boeing.

The suit (and shoes) will be worn by all Starliner crew members during launch, ascent into space and re-entry to Earth. Along with the Floatride technology, the suit features touchscreen-friendly gloves, a soft helmet that zips closed instead of latches, storage space in the legs and more to ensure it's comfortable and safe in outer space.

If you want some Floatride Foam benefits while remaining here on Earth, you're in luck. Reebok also announced this week its Floatride Racer 100g running shoe, which Montross said doesn't sacrifice cushioning in order to provide less weight and more speed.

The Floatride Racer is still undergoing testing and will officially launch in 2018. The Floatride Run is currently available; those shoes were launched in April and marked the debut of Reebok's Floatride technology.

OFFENSIVE TRADEMARKS

Supreme Court ruling leads to offensive trademark requests

A small group of companies and individuals are looking to register racially charged words and symbols for their products, including the N-word and a swastika, based on a U.S. Supreme Court decision on trademarks last month.

At least nine such applications have been filed with the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office (PTO) since the unanimous June 19 ruling throwing out a federal law prohibiting disparaging trademarks. All are pending.

In the past, the agency generally rejected similar filings because they included material that denigrated an identifiable group. But the court said the law violated free speech rights under the U.S. Constitution.

If the applicants follow through, such products as energy drinks, sweatshirts and fragrances could be branded with racial slurs. Federally registered trademarks, though not required to sell goods in the marketplace, can protect businesses against unauthorized uses of their brands.

Attorney David Bell, a trademark expert with the law firm Haynes and Boone, said the filings could be the tip of the iceberg if more people seek trademarks on offensive and vulgar terms.

"We're now opening the door, chipping away at what's acceptable under cultural norms," he said.

Since the decision, seven trademark applications for versions of the N-word, an offensive term aimed at black people, have been filed, PTO records show. Other applications include an epithet for people of Chinese descent, as well as a swastika symbol, the emblem of the German Nazi party.

The PTO told its staff on June 26 that the federal law's disparagement provision can no longer be used to reject a trademark, according to written guidance seen by Reuters.

The Trump administration had urged the high court to keep the provision in place.

In a legal brief, the Department of Justice said if the Supreme Court struck it down, the PTO would be forced to trademark "the most repellent racial slurs and white-supremacist slogans."

The PTO and the Department of Justice declined to comment.

Bell said he did not expect hate groups to seize on the high court ruling to further their agenda.

"Might the [Ku Klux Klan] or neo-Nazi groups start doing it more? They might, but I don't think trademark filings are high on their radar," he said. REUTERS

Frank Ocean serenaded Brad Pitt

Brad Pitt and Frank Ocean have a very cute history of mutual adoration. Now, Frank Ocean is taking it a step further — the singer serenaded the hot dad over the weekend at FyF Fest and I literally can not.

During his set, Ocean sang the Carpenters "Close to You" and the Jackson 5's "Never Can Say Goodbye" while projecting a video of Pitt — who was also onstage — talking on the phone in the background. Is he shooting the s— with Sienna Miller, or some other lady he's rumored to be doing it with? I don't know! But damn, Pitt is looking good.

Can these two get a room, already? Please, I'm begging. I am truly living for this celebrity friendship, courtship, whatever. Here's hoping it fares better than Pitt's marriage to Jolie.

Too soon?

So cute.

William & Harry are still sad about Princess Diana

Prince William and Prince Harry are talking about their last moments with their mother, and it's straight-up heartbreaking.

The brothers, who were 15 and 12 when Princess Diana tragically died, remember the last phone call they had with their mother before her death — and why they've been anguishing over the very moment ever since. Oh, dear things.

"As a kid I never enjoyed speaking to my parents on the phone," Harry says. "And we spent far too much time speaking on the phone rather than speaking to each other, because of just the way the situation was."

William adds, "If I'd known now obviously what was going to happen I wouldn't have been so blasé about it and everything else. But that phone call sticks in my mind quite, quite heavily."

It'll give you all the feels.

Nothing can really describe how I feel about this, except maybe an infinite series of frowning face emojis.

Selena Gomez is 25 now

Selena Gomez — a woman who chooses to make out with The Weeknd on a daily basis — celebrated her 25th birthday over the weekend. Which has me over here wondering the most important question: Selena Gomez is only 25?

The "Fetish" singer celebrated her first quarter of a century with a party that was so low-key and intimate that she just had to document it and share it on Instagram. Duh.

"Thank you for all of my bday love," Gomez wrote in one post. "I couldn't be more blessed."

"A lot of you don't realize how much you mean to me. I. Love. You. —think 25 is going to be epic. xo."

Kind of hate what she's doing with these dashes, but OK!

Anyway, happy belated birthday, Selena. Here's hoping the next 25 years of your life will be way more chill and less full of PDA, for my sake.

Happy birthday, I guess.

Andy Roddick & Brooklyn Decker are having another baby

C-list celebrities Andy Roddick and Brooklyn Decker — that's not a read, it's just a fact — are expecting a second child.

The former tennis pro spilled the beans that his wife Decker, 30, is pregnant with their second child during an acceptance speech at the International Tennis Hall of Fame Class of 2017 ceremony in Newport, Rhode Island, over the weekend.

"My wife Brooklyn... In a life full of good fortune, being around you has been by far the luckiest part. I'm a better human for us having met 10 years ago."

Gross!
"Brook, I don't know how you juggle it all," he continued. "You're the reason why my personal transition into a quasi-normal, everyday life has been gratifying and full. Hank will someday realize how lucky he is. Our daughter that's coming will also realize she has the best mother on earth.

So yeah, they're having a daughter. Just another brave couple willing to raise a child during Trump's reign of terror. It takes guts!

So on trend!

The boys from 'Dunkirk' go to war

In "Dunkirk," Jack Lowden plays an RAF pilot while Fionn Whitehead plays a private trapped on a beach in the north of France.
WARNER BROS. PICTURES

Jack Lowden and Fionn Whitehead were just happy to be in the latest from Christopher Nolan.

MATT PRIGGE
@mattprigge
matt.prigge@metro.us

War is hell. Making "Dunkirk" wasn't hell, but it was no walk in the park.

The latest from Christopher Nolan is an immersive, intense film about the aftermath of the World War II battle, which ended with 400,000 English soldiers needing to be evacuated from a beach in Northern France. They were surrounded by the German army; home was just across the English Channel. Nolan tries to bottle up that anxiety and fear, and beam it onto an IMAX screen. That required its actors to feel just a little bit of what the soldiers faced 77 years ago.

For Fionn Whitehead — who plays the closest thing "Dunkirk" has to a lead: an anonymous private named Tommy who tries to escape the beach by boat — that meant doing things almost for real, with real boats and real planes and real locations. The hardest part for him was spending so much time in the water.

"We were wearing full battle gear, which was made of wool," Whitehead recalls. Besides being weighed down by a pack, by the heavy military boots that had nails on the soles, there was the cloth itself. "Wool just soaks up the water quickly."

Meanwhile, Jack Lowden had to get in an old-fashioned plane. The actor plays Collins, an RAF pilot who winds up being shot down, then has to be rescued as his aircraft sinks. The tiny, thin planes were good for claustrophobia.

"What amazes you is how little protection they had. It was like sitting in a wheelbarrow with an engine and a sheet of metal wrapped around you," Lowden tells us. And they were noisy. "I don't know how they spoke to each other. It's like a washing machine thousands of feet above ground."

"It's certainly not as glamorous as it looks," he adds.

Not that they're complaining.

"It teaches you not to moan about anything," Lowden says of the experience.

"It was just about getting on with it, really," Whitehead adds. "I was more than happy to be there."

Whitehead is a newbie, and he admits he was star-struck when he first arrived on set. But he found what Lowden found, too: No celebrity acted like one. They were all there to do a job — even Harry Styles, who plays one of the privates.

"There was no diva-ness, no one wanted special treatment," Whitehead recalls. "It put everyone on a level playing field."

That neither Whitehead nor Lowden are well-known, especially among American audiences, helps the film. It makes their characters blank slates, easier to identify with.

"You're forced to put yourself in the shoes of these young soldiers," Whitehead says. "The way the shots are done means you're practically walking with them."

You never learn anything about any of the soldiers you see — where they're from, where they've been, what battles they've fought before.

"You shouldn't need a backstory with these characters. The moments they're in are so raw and real, there's no need," Whitehead says. "You should just be able to experience it as they did."

What Gen Z needs to know about job hunting

Your résumé will only get you so far.

SARA FEINSTEIN
@SaraBFeinstein
sara.feinstein@metro.us

The first members of Generation Z — those born between 1996 and 2010 — are graduating from college and beginning to enter the workforce. But sliding right into the working world certainly won't be a walk in the park. As the job market becomes increasingly competitive, these tech-savvy grads are going to need to amp up their game if they want to stand out.

We spoke with Anastasia Kuznetsova of digital agency Ready Set Rocket for some tips that will help these newbies secure the job of their dreams:

Don't be a one-trick pony

Staying in your comfort zone might be easier than venturing into new areas, but it won't get you ahead in the working world. In fact, the best way applicants can expand their career opportunities is by demonstrating versatility on their résumé and during the interview. If you're applying for a job as a web designer, "you want to make sure that your curated selection of work shows your breadth as a designer and demonstrates your ability to adapt your design style across a number of clients and aesthetics," says Kuznetsova.

In other words: The more skills, the better. "A candidate that just does app design is much less intriguing than someone who also has experience with interface design and dabbles in photography and motion graphics," she explains.

Showcase personal projects and interests

What you do on the job is one thing, but what's even more interesting to potential employers is what you choose to do during your free time.

"They want to know that you're passionate, and personal work often shows off your capabilities since you aren't working under deadlines," says Kuznetsova. So if you've got some creative side projects, show them off.

"Maybe you have a passion for food photography and have an Instagram devoted entirely to that side project," she says. Anything that goes beyond your day-to-day roles — whether it's a blog, an app or a folder of sketches — will help you stand out from the crowd.

Know how to sell your work

"When you're in school, nobody tells you how important it is to be able to present your work," says Kuznetsova. But that's a crucial skill to have in the working world. So applicants should be prepared to present and sell their accomplishments.

How to do that strategically? First, discuss the objective for the project, says Kuznetsova. Next, speak to the process: Talk about what you did first and identify the challenges you faced.

Once you've walked through those initial steps, you should reveal the solution you arrived at and go through the specific creative decisions you made.

At the end of the day, employers want to be able to see your thinking method and envision how you can replicate the same process at their company.

Raisman talks Beantown, Tokyo

It's a balancing act for this Olympic gymnast.

CATHERINE PERLOFF
sports@metro.us

Aly Raisman is busy, awash with opportunities to attend award shows, lend her resources and star-power to worthwhile causes and share her story with her global fan base. But don't think this gold-medalist has forgotten her Olympic roots; Raisman says she's still eyeing a third Olympic run at Tokyo's 2020 Games.

"That's definitely something that's on my mind," Raisman says. "I took a full year off after London. This time I'm going to take off a bit more time because I was really lucky to be even busier than I was after London."

She adds, "I feel like right now I'm so happy and so grateful about everything I'm doing that I just want to keep it up right now and then I'll continue training."

In the meantime, the Needham native is giving back to Boston. Raisman is a brand ambassador for mattress company Leesa's social giving program, which donated 165 mattresses to Heading Home, a Boston-based shelter and organization aimed at ending homelessness. She was on hand as Leesa donated its mattresses to a Heading Home shelter in Dorchester on July 18, speaking and meeting with the shelter's residents.

"To be able to be here and spend the day with these kids is very, very special," says Raisman. "I think it goes without saying how important it is for me to be involved with something like this."

The 23-year-old athlete notes that the philanthropy of other Boston sports stars inspires her to also give back.

"I think it's really motivating to be from Boston because it's such a great sports city. It's one of the best sports cities in the whole entire world," Raisman says. "To be around so many athletes who are so motivated, such great businessmen and do so much to give back to the community is very incredible to watch."

Leesa CEO David Wolfe says Raisman approached the company about getting involved with its charity work after buying a Leesa mattress for herself. Wolfe has talked with the Olympian at length and says he was struck by her desire to dedicate her life to making a difference.

"We're in the business of dreams [as] a sleep company, and she said that she doesn't want to be remembered for what she did when she was 21, even though she's very proud of what she's done," Wolfe says, referring to her last Olympic run at Rio 2016. "She wants to be remembered for what she's done her whole life."

Wolfe says that next week Leesa and Raisman will be launching a jointly-branded product. A percentage of the proceeds will go to her charity of choice.

Raisman isn't only busy with philanthropic work. She has a new book, "Fierce," coming out Nov. 14 which is already available for pre-order on Amazon. She says the book will document her life story, both during the Olympics and the training that led up to it, and will make readers laugh and cry.

"I'm just basically showing everything that I've been through that's made me the person I am today," she says.

Raisman's book will also focus on body positivity, a subject on which she has been a vocal supporter.

"We all have moments when we feel anxious and nervous and I think it's really important to talk about," she says. "I think the more we talk about it the more we can help each other."

Raisman says she tells young girls struggling with their body image to focus on what's on the inside.

"I've found that when I've focused on things that make me feel empowered and strong, I don't worry as much about how I look," she says.

"Competing in the Olympics, you worry people are watching you compete on TV in a leotard," Raisman adds. "But I think it's important to take a step back and realize that if you're a good person, it's a bajillion times more important than the way you look."

Fantasy baseball: Young guns to look for

There are some prospects set to make their MLB debuts this summer that could help you win your fantasy baseball league.

KYLE BISHOP
@amoralpanic
sports@metro.us

Yoan Moncada, the game's consensus top prospect, was called up by the Chicago White Sox last week. Here are a few other kids on the farm who could help your fantasy team upon their arrival to the major leagues.

Rafael Devers, 3B, Boston Red Sox

Devers is just 20 years old and hadn't played above High-A before this season, but he's had a breakout year in the minor leagues. Devers hit .300/.369/.575 with 18 home runs in 77 games at Double-A before earning a promotion to Triple-A earlier this month. He's continued to rake there, and the parent club's only real weak spot on the diamond just happens to be third base. If Boston doesn't make a trade before next week's deadline, Devers could get his shot – and that honestly might be their best move in this situation. While third base is quite deep this season for fantasy purposes, Devers has a ton of upside.

Amed Rosario, SS, New York Mets

The Mets have been patient with Rosario to the point of frustrating both fans and fantasy owners. The wait could soon be over, however.

New York Mets prospect Amed Rosario is one of the best young players in baseball. GETTY IMAGES

New York is all but out of the postseason race and expected to sell off some of their veterans, including Asdrubal Cabrera and Neil Walker. Rosario has cooled off in recent weeks but is still hitting .330/.368/.473 at Triple-A right now. He'll need to prove that line isn't just a product of the hitter-friendly Pacific Coast League, but once he's up with the big club, the 21-year-old would be immediately relevant in most formats given the lack of depth at shortstop this season.

Brent Honeywell, SP, Tampa Bay Rays

Honeywell's 4.27 ERA and 1.41 WHIP at Triple-A belie how well he's pitched. The 22-year-old has posted an 11.1 K/9 while limiting walks and home runs, but some poor batted ball luck and a low strand rate have hurt his ratios. Honeywell got a lot of attention at the All-Star Futures Game in Miami earlier this month. He struck out four in two scoreless innings, and in the process became the first pitcher in the game's history to capture MVP honors. With the Rays still very much alive in both the AL East and wild-card chases, you have to wonder how many more opportunities they'll give the struggling Blake Snell in the rotation before Honeywell starts to look like a better option.

Aries You'll excel if you take action. A strong sense of discipline will ensure that you do the best job possible. Don't worry about jealous competitors. Live in the moment.

Taurus You'll take one step forward and two steps back. Don't get frustrated by what's going on around you. Learn from the experience and turn a negative into a positive.

Gemini Strive for perfection and present what you have to offer. You'll dazzle onlookers and gain support and popularity. Put your best foot forward and aim to please.

Cancer Keep your life simple, within reason and within budget. Overdoing it in any way will lead to regret. Make wise choices and don't fear doing your own thing.

Leo Engage in whatever interests you. Check the job market for something that will allow you to use your skills in new and exciting ways. Challenge yourself to do better.

Virgo Don't trust anyone with your personal affairs. You'll prosper if you are willing to take part in networking events. Don't let an emotional matter hold you back.

Libra Be open about the way you feel. Share your opinions and make things happen. You can make a difference that will boost your reputation. Personal gains will stand out.

Scorpio Watch out for anyone acting peculiar or being obstructive. Stay focused on whatever responsibility or job you are given and avoid getting into a senseless argument.

Sagittarius A little excitement will get you going and help you bring about positive change. Stretch your skills, knowledge and physical attributes to reach a goal you wish to achieve.

Capricorn Look at every aspect of a deal someone offers you. Practicality must be applied if you are considering an investment that has some risk involved.

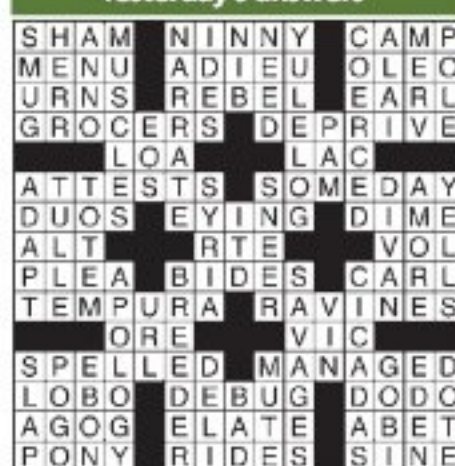

Aquarius Spread your wings and fly. You'll have plenty to discover and explore if you participate in what's going on in your community. Partnerships will improve your life.

Pisces Concentrate on your professional goals. Hard work will help you overcome any distractions you face. Don't let emotional matters slow you down. EUGENIA LAST
